

Title of the paper begins 3 or 4 lines down from the top margin

Title of Paper is Centered and Bolded

Name is one double-space line down

Firstname M.I. Lastname

University

Course

Instructor

Due Date

If you are creating annotations for two or more topics, you need to list the topic as a heading before you start the first annotation.

Title of Paper is Centered and Bolded

Gender Differences in Leadership

Gannouni, K. & Ramboarison-Lalao, L. (2019). Examining gender effects on leadership among future manager: Comparing Hofstede's masculine vs. feminine countries. Management International,

23, 42-51. <https://doi.org/10.7202/1068534>

The annotation of the article needs to clearly indicate why the article was written, including the major points of the article. When the article is a research study, it is essential to include the hypothesis/hypotheses in narrative form, as well as information on methodology. It is also necessary to clearly present the results and conclusions of the study.

In general, the article does not need to be cited within the body of the annotation.

However, if you use a direct quotation, you must provide the proper citation. Additionally, if you include any information from ancillary resources, these must be cited within the narrative.

When you analyze/evaluate the article, it is important to remember that you are trying to find connections. That is, how might this article contribute to your final research paper? Moreover, how does this article correlate with the course? And, how do all of the articles correlate to one another?

Schaumberg, R. & Flynn, F. J. (2017). Self-reliance: A gender perspective on its relationship to communality and leadership evaluations. Academy of Management Journal, 60(5), 1859-1881.

<https://doi.org/10.5465/amj.2015.0018>

The annotation of the article needs to clearly indicate why the article was written, including the major points of the article. When the article is a research study, it is essential to include the hypothesis/hypotheses in narrative form, as well as information on methodology. It is also necessary to clearly present the results and conclusions of the study.

*The resources are listed in alphabetical order.

*Begin annotation at 0.5; additional paragraphs, are indented an additional 0.5.

*Citations are only needed for direct quotations and the inclusion of ancillary resources (e.g., course material, course textbook).

*Resources should be current (i.e., within the past 5 years)

In general, the article does not need to be cited within the body of the annotation. However, if you use a direct quotation, you must provide the proper citation. Additionally, if you include any information from ancillary resources, these must be cited within the narrative.

When you analyze/evaluate the article, it is important to remember that you are trying to find connections. That is, how might this article contribute to your final research paper? Moreover, how does this article correlate with the course? And, how do all of the articles correlate to one another?

Leadership Theories

Khorakian, A. & Sharifirad, M. S. (2019). Integrating implicit leadership theories, leader-member exchange, self-efficacy, and attachment theory to predict job performance. Psychological Reports, 122(3), 1117-1144. <https://doi.org/10.1177/0033294118773400>

The annotation of the article needs to clearly indicate why the article was written, including the major points of the article. When the article is a research study, it is essential to include the hypothesis/hypotheses in narrative form, as well as information on methodology. It is also necessary to clearly present the results and conclusions of the study.

In general, the article does not need to be cited within the body of the annotation. However, if you use a direct quotation, you must provide the proper citation. Additionally, if you include any information from ancillary resources, these must be cited within the narrative.

When you analyze/evaluate the article, it is important to remember that you are trying to find connections. That is, how might this article contribute to your final research paper? Moreover, how does this article correlate with the course? And, how do all of the articles correlate to one another?

Lee, Y.D., Chen, P.C., & Su, C.L. (2020). The evolution of the leadership theories and the analysis of new research trends. International Journal of Organizational Innovation, 12(3), 88-104. <http://ijoi-online.org/>

The annotation of the article needs to clearly indicate why the article was written, including the major points of the article. When the article is a research study, it is essential to include the hypothesis/hypotheses in narrative form, as well as information on methodology. It is also necessary to clearly present the results and conclusions of the study.

In general, the article does not need to be cited within the body of the annotation. However, if you use a direct quotation, you must provide the proper citation. Additionally, if you include any information from ancillary resources, these must be cited within the narrative.

When you analyze/evaluate the article, it is important to remember that you are trying to find connections. That is, how might this article contribute to your final research paper? Moreover, how does this article correlate with the course? And, how do all of the articles correlate to one another?

A Reference list is ONLY needed if you use additional resources in the annotations. If you only use the articles, there will be no reference list.